

Kim R. Ramsey-White, Ph.D.

Dr. Kim R. Ramsey-White joined the Key Leader family in 2008 and continues to enjoy the opportunity to guide students into a better understanding of servant leadership, and encouraging them to embrace their leadership potential. She is an active youth advocate who understands that her career experience, coupled with her faith, has prepared her to serve in the capacity of molding and directing this next generation of youth leaders.

Dr. Ramsey-White has been at Georgia State University for 19 years and currently serves as the Director of Undergraduate Education in Public Health. In her role as director of the undergraduate program she has primary oversight for the development and day to day operations of this new degree program at Georgia State University. She is extremely excited to be in a position that will educate and train public health professionals to confront and reduce public health issues, including health disparities, in our country and abroad. She also continues to champion diversity and inclusion programming and planning in institutions of higher education.

She holds a Bachelor of Science degree in marketing from Hampton University, an MPH from the University of Alabama-Birmingham and a Ph.D. in Research, Measurement and Statistics from Georgia State University. One of her most exciting initiatives is planning and leading international summer study abroad trips for high school and college students.
